Articulation Agreements

An "Articulation Agreement" defines a relationship between two institutions of higher education that enables students to more easily transfer from their former institution to the University of Cincinnati. Cincinnati has articulation agreements with several colleges across the country and each agreement is outlined below. Consult the list of agreements below or ask your current academic advisor if your school has an articulation agreement with the University of Cincinnati. If they do have that agreement, you can count on your credits transferring to the University of Cincinnati.

If your current institution does not have an articulation agreement, you can still transfer to the University of Cincinnati.

Articulation agreements are at the discretion of the colleges and are subject to change.
